LCS Constructors builds future in Bay Area Houston

Feb. 12, 2007

BAY AREA HOUSTON, Texas – Eager to help the region’s growth, LCS Constructors Inc. built a foundation for the future by recently joining the Bay Area Houston Economic Partnership.

LCS is a team of experienced laboratory facility experts dedicated to providing a single source of responsibility for the planning, design support and construction of laboratory and technical facilities.

LCS provides consulting in design and planning of laboratory facilities – both new and renovations.

“Membership in the Bay Area Houston Economic Partnership means an opportunity to lead and LCS is eager to help the region’s high-tech industries build more laboratories,” said Dennis Brewer, executive vice president for LCS.

Founded in 1992, LCS has completed design and construction projects for some of the most prominent institutions and corporations in the world. Unlike typical commercial office buildings, laboratory and technical facilities demand specific expertise from both designers and builders and LCS can help.

LCS offers:

- Accurate conceptual estimating based on minimal design criteria or schematics;
- Design-build services for the single-sourcing of project responsibility;
- Turn-key self perform technical facility construction trades such as mechanical, plumbing and laboratory furniture/equipment installation; and,
- Complete maintenance, including fume hood inspections for OSHA compliance.

Bay Area Houston Economic Partnership President Jim Reinhartsen said businesses like LCS fill a need for the area's primary industries.

“With its high standards, LCS helps Bay Area Houston’s primary industries of aerospace and chemical compete with other businesses around the world,” said Reinhartsen.
